HALL OF VALLADOLID CITY COUNCIL. 10 APRIL 2015

One of the main objectives of the CreArt Network –with the support of the European Commission under the Culture Program– is to make cultural actors and the citizens of European medium-sized cities aware of how culture, and specifically in the field of artistic creation, can stimulate the development of our cities when promoted by public administrations. CreArt aims to facilitate, as in a catalytic process, concrete actions that encourage an artistic and creative exchange, as well as presenting proposals for cultural cooperation among European medium-sized cities. It is our desire to involve European and International political representatives, so they can endorse culture as a way to promote common values, social cohesion, urban development and economic growth.

CreArt believes that all cultural policies should focus on encouraging development and creative diversity. Since the European Union is interested in culture and creativity as engines for change, the CreArt Project is working to demonstrate that culture and creativity can boost the future of our cities, supporting their artists and the transnational mobility of the people working in the cultural sector, and at the same time stimulating the international circulation of artworks and cultural products and intercultural communications. In this we follow the same specific objectives as the Culture Program of the EU.

As expressed in the Catalyse 2014 Manifesto from the d'Avignon Forum "we should appeal to culture to analyze and reflect about the crisis". To be aware that "the future role of culture depends on how it can contribute to innovation" and "in the crossroads of arts, business, and technology, the cultural and creative sectors are in a strategic position to influence other industries". The European Commission itself has said that policies should be designed to support all kinds of innovation, not only in technology.

This is therefore an invitation to reconsider the role of culture and creativity with its potential for cross-border activities in a broader social context, and to understand and use its transnational role as a catalyst for innovation in European cities. This is the same route that CreArt is following, convinced that culture can transform urban spaces into creative cities. There are ways to reinvest culture in urban space when everything looks glum in times of individual and collective skepticism. At this point we agree with the European Union and its Creative Europe Program in key areas such as the "Promotion of cultural and creative sectors for growth and employment in the EU" predominant theme of the 2020 agenda.

We believe that a culture of openness and curiosity is essential for any city that truly wants to encourage and promote the best creative initiatives, fostering knowledge and exchange with others from different parts of our Europe. Today, the role of public institutions is -largely- to facilitate these ways of management and cultural exchange, nourishing a collaborative intelligence. In CreArt we are working in this direction.

- 10:00 - 10:50 Discussion 1:
CreArt. A new space for creation in Europe.

With the experience gained in the past three years, we can confirm that CreArt is a new space for creation in Europe. Managers, curators and technicians from the CreArt cities have made it possible for artists from their cities to participate abroad in workshops, artists in residence programs, or exhibitions. We have edited catalogues, brochures and disseminated calls in different languages; we have jointly celebrated activities, such as the European Day of Artistic Creativity, or we have collaborated in research studies that will help to cooperate in the construction of a richer European culture.

The work continues, and our daily challenge is to keep on making proposals that are useful to build the legal framework for cultural life and creativity to flourish in our cities. We have shared these new work methodologies with other European cities.

Participants:
Angjerd Munksgaard, Advisor visual arts in the Municipality of Kristiansand
Jakub Rychtecky, Deputy Mayor of Pardubice.
Barna Szabó, Harghita County Manager

Moderator:
Juan Manuel Guimerans, Chief Director of Culture. Valladolid City Council.

- 10:50 - 11:00 Break
- 11:00 - 11:55 Discussion 2:
The experience of circulation of artworks and mobility of artists within the CreArt Network

The experience of artists from the CreArt cities working abroad (i.e out of their local environment), giving them the opportunity to meet, exchange and collaborate with artists from different countries, is one of the greatest initiatives of our project.

We all know that artists are for cities one of the most active agents and cities are for them one of their best work scenarios. These exchanges and the return of the artists-city relationship, is not just economic.

Participants:
Josip Zanki. President of HDLU- Croatian Association of Visual Artists
Marianna Pederzolli, City Counselor. Genoa
Laima Nerkeviciene. Deputy Manager of Vilnius rotuse. CreArt Vilnius

Moderator:
Amaya Bombin, Artist.

- 11:55 - 12:10 Coffee Break

- 12:10 - 13:00 Discussion 3:
The use of common artistic services in European cities.

In the CreArt network there are cities that organize Artists in Residence programs, spaces to develop workshops with artists, exhibition halls... To manage culture today is to maximize the economic resources we have and to be ambitious in our cultural programs. To make the available infrastructures in the network profitable is a basic issue for CreArt. Moreover, in these places, artists from the CreArt cities work together, generating, in many cases new projects themselves. In these cities, citizens can see the works of their local artists and those by other European countries. In these places artists can work with internationally renowned artists and learn from their experience. This is one of the great advantages of being part of this network.

- 17:15 - 17:30 Coffee Break
- 17:30 - 18:20 Discussion 4:
The necessary cultural coordination of the European medium-sized cities and the promotion of creativity.

The coordination of European medium-sized cities should serve to catalyze the energy of cities and their creative territories. The European medium-sized cities play an important role in organizing the European urban system, also contributing to the demographic balance and a better distribution of economic activity in the territory.

Europe cannot be understood without referring to the history of its cities. A network of cities working in coordination with other European cities is something of special interest today in our Europe. In a globalizing era with different dynamics, also in the cultural field, Europe reaffirms and activates this cultural fabric. We develop real and practical ways of cooperation, and deepen the challenges that these European cities have regarding the cultural dualities: global / local; creation / preservation; complexity / simplicity of identities.

The "competition" with the big metropolis should not be considered as a disadvantage, but a different way of thinking in all related to the cultural and artistic fields. CreArt can be taken as a model of cooperation among cities working for artistic creation in Europe.

encounter RETHINKING ART EDUCATION in Kristiansand. This will be an extraordinary 12 hours' encounter, happening on the island of Bragdøya away from urban disturbances.

Together with the local researchers Lisbet Skregelid and Tormod W. Anundsen, Tribbensee has been designing the program and structure for this event.

Tribbensee explains the curatorial idea behind RETHINKING ART EDUCATION:

We have been inviting both international and local specialists as lecturers, but we would like to look at all of our visitors as «participants» rather than separating them into «audience» and «experts».

We expect all of our guests to come with a strong professional interest in art education or educational art as we intend this conference to be a living encounter with actual happening exchange of ideas. We thus encourage everybody to participate actively in the discussions and to prepare themselves through following our blog in advance.

For our international CreArt visitors there is even the opportunity to contribute themselves with a short lecture (5-10 min.) about an own example of interest concerning our topic of «rethinking art education». This would be presented at a symposium in the afternoon. Please let us know in advance if you would like to do so.

Rethinking art education may already start in advance of the conference. You will find linked background information on our blog, advised by our lecturers. The seminar will include some unconventional elements, such as an extraordinary environment as the site of the event, activist catering solutions, boat-trips and a bonfire. We prefer focussing on the transformative potential of art, on the magic of social encounters and on the value of actual re-thinking, rather than representations, power-strategies or institutional manifestations of status.

VALLADOLID

The historic centre of Valladolid, the city on the Pisuerga River, is home to an interesting collection of Renaissance buildings comprising houses, palaces, churches, and one of its most emblematic buildings, its cathedral. The city has an intense cultural schedule thanks to its status as a university town, and hosts events such as the Seminci, the International Film Festival, one of the highlights of the Spanish film calendar.

Another event that marks life in Valladolid and awakes the passions of its inhabitants is Easter. Its processions, declared of International Tourist Interest, are real parades of works of religious art. Valladolid began to become important from the 11th century, when Count Ansúrez came to govern the city in the name of Alfonso VI. It reached its peak during the reign of the Catholic Monarchs (15th C.), when the university became one of the most important in the country. And, as well as playing a leading role in key episodes in Spanish history, Valladolid has twice been the capital, firstly with Carlos I (16th C.) and later when Felipe III came to the throne (17th C.). The capital of Castilla y León preserves an important heritage of monuments in its old quarter, especially aristocratic houses and religious buildings. Outstanding among them is the unfinished Cathedral. The architect Juan de Herrera was commissioned by King Felipe II to design the original scheme in the 16th century. The death of both left the church unfinished and its central body was not opened until 1668. Years later, in 1730, Master Churriguera finished the work on the main front. Inside the cathedral, the great chapel houses a magnificent reredos made by Juan de Juni in 1562. From the complex you can get into the Diocesan Museum, in which the outstanding features are various carvings attributed to Gregorio Fernández and to Juni himself, as well as a silver monstrance by Juan de Arfe. Other interesting churches are the Gothic church of Santiago, with an important reredos depicting the Adoration of the Magi, created by Berruguete in 1537, and the church of Santa María la Antigua, with its unusual pyramid-shaped Romanesque tower. The 16th-century Plaza Mayor, presided over by a statue of Count Ansúrez, is right in the heart of the city. On one side of it stands the City Hall, a building from the beginning of the century crowned by the clock tower. In the nearby streets are many large houses and palaces. The Palace of Los Pimentel, today the seat of the Provincial Council, is one of the most important, as King Philip II was born in it on 21 May 1527. The 16th-century Palace of the Marquises of Valverde, and that of the banker Fabio Nelli - a building with a Classicist stamp built in 1576 - should also be pointed out. The Museum of Valladolid occupies this complex, exhibiting a collection of furniture, sculptures, paintings and ceramic pieces. The University, whose Baroque façade is decorated with various academic symbols, and the Santa Cruz College, which as well as housing a valuable library forms one of the first examples of the Spanish Renaissance, say much about the cultural importance of Valladolid. The city preserves houses where great historical characters once lived, like the Casa de Cervantes, where the author of Quijote lived with his family between 1603 and 1606. As a curiosity, it was in this house where the writer gave his masterpiece the finishing touches. A visit to the house-museum enables you to get to know the way of life of a noble family in the 17th century through possessions and furniture from the time. You can also visit the Christopher Columbus House-Museum, where the navigator spent the last years of his life. Nowadays the palace exhibits various pieces and documents related to the discovery of America. From nineteenth century Valladolid, the house where one of the provincial capital's most illustrious characters - José Zorrilla - was born is preserved. The house, which is open to the public, brings together various personal possessions, furniture and documents that belonged to the Romantic writer. As a city that has experienced notable urban growth in the last few decades, Valladolid offers a wide range of leisure and cultural opportunities: cinemas, theatres and museums, like the National Sculpture Museum, at its site in San Gregorio College. This splendid Flemish Gothic style building - one of the most outstanding buildings in the provincial capital - is important for its exhibition of polychrome carvings made by artists like Alonso Berruguete or Gregorio Fernández. The Museum of Contemporary Spanish Art, located in the Herreriano Courtyard, one of the cloisters of the former Monastery of San Benito, preserves more than 800 paintings and sculptures from the 20th century. Easter, declared of International Tourist Interest, is the most important festival in Valladolid. The distinguishing feature of this celebration is rooted in its processions, formed by genuine works of art and Castilian imagery. Another important event is the Seminci, the International Film Festival, one of the events not to be missed in the Spanish cinema calendar. Valladolid's province is revealed through different tours like those along the Red Wine Route and the Knight's Route, which lead to the "Alma de Castilla" and the "Tierra de Campos". The first of these routes leads to the wine-growing country of Quintanilla de Onésimo, Vega Sicilia, Pesquera de Duero and Peñafiel. Here you can visit the castle and Wine Museum as well as interesting cellars. The Knight's Route unfolds to the south of the provincial capital and here you can get to know the cellars of Boecillo, the Mudejar architecture of Mojados and Olmedo and the medieval wealth of Iscar and Portillo. Historic towns like Simancas, where the General Archive of the Kingdom can be found; Tordesillas, of great historical and artistic importance; and Medina del Campo, famous for its markets, fairs and spa, lie in the so-called "Soul of Castile". Meanwhile, the Tierra de Campos brings you to medieval towns like Medina de Rioseco and beautiful examples of popular Valladolid architecture like Villalón de los Campos or Castromonte, known for its medicinal waters. To tour this whole area you can stay in the excellent facilities of the Parador de Turismo at Tordesillas. It is also a good place for trying Valladolid cuisine, where the roast lamb and suckling pig are famous. Castilian soup (made with bread, garlic and ham), cod with garlic and game dishes are also famous. To accompany these recipes there is nothing better than the wines with Denomination of Origin from the province: Ribera del Duero, Cigales, Rueda and Toro.
